

Dental Prevention Care Advice for Cats and Dogs

Unfortunately some pets and certain breeds are predisposed to dental disease. We can however help to keep our pets teeth healthy and help to slow down the disease. Even though your pet has a dental today doesn't mean that they will be free of dental disease in the future and they might have to have regular and further dental treatments.

Brushing your pet's teeth is the most effective way to prevent dental disease. Although we respect that this might not be suitable for all pets.

Suitable Dental toys such as Kongs that encourage your pet to chew safely will help to clean the teeth and gums without causing damage.

Diet can also play a major part in dental disease in pets and can make dental disease much more likely.

Feed your pet good quality dry food, you can even get a veterinary specific dental diet from us. Such as Hills TD biscuits for Dogs and Cats.

Regular Dental check ups with the nurse or vet will help spot any early signs of dental disease.

If you wish to book your pet in to see one of our nurses to discuss any of these points further, or for a dental check, then please let us know. We can also demonstrate to you how to introduce teeth cleaning to your pet.
